At the supermarket

It is another day at the supermarket. The leader of the market, Carl, is busy stacking some cans of baked beans. The market is huge. The entrance has shiny glass doors and at the very end of the market, there are different payment options and even an automatic pay system for those who wants to pay fast without almost any lines. The cashiers are often busy working and taking payments, as the shop opens early in the morning, at 8AM, but it often opens a little bit early. The shop is going to open in ten minutes, but there is already people outside, so Carl finishes stacking the baked beans and opens the door. Welcome to another day at the supermarket.
